The following from the Nevada Mail is as applicable to this community as it is to Nevada:

It is to be deeply regretted that some method cannot be devised by which the city can protect its own business men from the inroads of merchant tramps.

If the masses of the people who trade in Nevada could be benefitted by these incursions we would open our arms to all of them. If the people could buy the same class of goods from them one per cent cheaper than from our own merchants we would insist on extending a general invitation to every traveling vender to take part in our tradn.

.There is no such benefit to be de rived. The man who locates here for a few weeks and then moves his stock of goods to some other point can never be held responsible for the goods he sells. When the day of reckoning comes he is not here.
